A ROMANTIC STORY.

An Alleged Bourbon Prince Who Was Exiled by the Great Napoleon.

The Reading Times has for several days past published in connected form a strange story. The story is of a French Bourbon prince exiled in infancy to New Orleans by Napoleon Bonaparte and a resident of Reading nearly the story, but five years old. His father was came to visit him. Tennyson abhorred killed during the terrible French revolution and the young prince was smuggled to America by two reliable maids at the behest of Napoleon. The mother died broken hearted soon after. while the child was taken to New Orleans.

After the French restoration the most vigilant search for the lost prince during many years failed to find him, and it became uniwas lost at sea or made away with. The child was baptized by a priest whose well-known loyalty to the house of Bourbon was unquestioned, and was named Guillaume Louis de Bourbon, after one of his distinguished ancestioned, and was named Guillaume Louis de Bourbon, after one of his distinguished ancestioned and a great love for America and Tennyson had a great love for America and was lost at sea or made away with. The writer of the article says: "His age corresponds with the eventral period of the French revolution. He often told me that his parents died while he was an infant, and that his aunts had raised him. He spoke in his native lan-guage when he chose to. One of the stipulamen, however, arranged at the 200-yards stage, it was agreed to shoot the distinguished markswas that he should receive no education, but he was taught a trade on his arrival at a proper age. The women were loyal to the mandates of age. Mr. de Borbon was never married, and when he

One of the concluding paragraphs of this in-They did not relish the idea of trotting through wet grass, so they stayed at home. Only a few of them, though, had even the slightest show of winning, so their absence was excusable. When a big prize stands right up in front of a man he will do a good deal of shooting, even when the weather is uncomfortation. With the death of William Louis de Borbon another link of the Bourbon dynasty is blotted out. He had no issue and was, therefore, the last of the blood royal in his line. There was a strong resemblance in his face and build to many of the Bourbons, whose life-sized portraits can be seen in many of the art galleries of Paris to this day."

The writer of the article is an aged physician in a neighboring city, who claims that he ob-tained his information while on a visit to Paris over forty years ago and by a visit to New Orleans, and that he was on terms of confiden-tial friendship with Mr. de Borbon. The article has created great public interest by reason of the mystery surrounding the early life of Mr. de Borbon and the position he attained in Reading as one of the oldest and best-known hotel proprietors in eastern Pennsylvania.

STORIES OF TENNYSON. Some of the Peculiarities of the Late Poet Laurente.

nelish Letter to the Boston Herald. Though Farringford, in Freshwater, was Tennyson's home, Aldworth, in Haslemere, became by force of circumstances his summer results and Saturday-to-Monday cheap trippers.

Tennyson used to say that he was literally driven use from the Isle of Wig. nyson's home, Aldworth, in Hasiemere, became from the Isle of Wig by the summer visitors.

Not content with adir, the demesns of the Farringford these enthusiastic but not considerate sightseers would dog the steps of the object of their admiration whene'er he took his walks abroad. Twenty years ago he purchased Aldworth and made it his summer retreat. The house was designed by James Knowles, who, besides acquiring celebrity as the editor of the Nineteenth Century Review, is a professional Every year, in May, since 1872 Tennyson has gone to Aldworth, returning to Freehwater in October, when the trippers cease from troubling and the 'Arry is at rest. Tennyson had acand the Arry is at rest. Tennyson had acquired an aversion to summer holiday mortals that was almost morbid in its intensity. Perhaps this grew by what it fed on, perhaps a part of it, a small part of it, was affectation, for Tennyson was a hero wershiper, and, as far as himself was concerned, was not indiffer-ent to the world's applause.

He did not object to homage. Any form of it that was sincere gave him a real pleasure, but he decidedly objected to being stared at. He saw no reason why strangers should wish to come or should be permitted to come trooping over his grounds, peering into his study win-dows or intercepting him is heldely allowed. dows or intercepting him in his daily walks. But if they chose to take off their hats as they passed him on the road that was another mat-ter. Sir Edwin Arnold says that Tennyson "had vanity, a noble vanity, a proud pleasure in the very notoriety which brought strangers peeping and stealing about his gates to get a sight of him, albeit you saw Private Road painted on the first rod of his domain and Private Grounds inscribed upon the first boundary fence. He did not like the country people to pass him on the road without recognizing him, and now and then, when a visitor from afar came with genuine adoration, he could and would be immensely gracious and generous."

Once every year the park at Farringford was thrown open to all comers. The Freshwater flower show was held there in A gust, but Tennyson did not appear on these occasions; he left the management of the affair and the duties of host to his son Hallam, who for years has acted as his father's secretary and

There is a great deal to be said in support of the resentment Tennyson showed to intruders. Countless stories have been told of the audacity of strangers in Freshwater, and the Americans caster, who died last year, over eighty years of age. The child when exiled was, according to viewing and interviewers, and stipulated, there-forc, with this visitor that there should be noth-ing of the kind. "Interviewing." rejoined the southerner, with an expression of great disgust; "in this house we are gentlemen. We leave interviewing to those darned Yankees. Tennyson was extremely eager to go to America, and, touching this point, a story is related to the effect that Barnum offered him an enormous sum of money to go there, though probably not as one of the attractions in the "greatest show on earth." "All you have to tors. Mr. de Bourbon came to Reading from New Orleans and settled here when a young man. He was possessed of gentlemanly bearing, refined appearance, of punctilious dress, all of which stamped him as a man of no ordinary ancestry.

The writer of the article says: "His age cortical and the Americans; nothing pleased him more than the fact that the Americans appreciate him and read him largely. It was only his great age that prevented him carrying out the wish he had so often expressed of seeing with his own eyes the land that he loved so well and for eyes the land that he loved so well and for which he often testified his affection in intercourse with friends. He was always glad to meet with distinguished American men and women of letters, and he loved to recall his conversations with Longfellow and Lowell and Oliver Wendell Holmes. It was only a few days ago that he welcomed Mrs. James T. Fields and Miss Sarah Orne Jewett to Aldworth.

Punishments in Mexico. From the Nineteenth Century.

The notion of suiting the punishment to the main object of the judges, and the contempt for suffering is absolute. The rich may escape with whole skins, but those without "palm oil" have scant mercy. For instance, the mere accusavored quarter, will bring on the accused the ordinary punishment for such conduct. This consists in breaking the ankle bones and pitching the sufferer into the nearest lane or ditch, whence his relatives may or may not remove him. As there are no surgeons and no medical appliances, the bones cannot be set, and reunite so as to leave the toes turned inward, directly facing each other. At Tangier I have several times seen one of these poor creatures—possibly quite innocent of the offense attributed to him —hobbling over the cobbled alleys, while the passers-by nudged each other and muttered "Thief." In the prisons men and women chained together night and day, under every circumstance of indescribable filth and horror, wait until their friends, who bring them all the food they get, are able or willing to offer a bribe sufficient for their release. I might go on with many details, but I merely want to indicate the one paramount fact of the absence of all system, principle, order or responsibility among the so-called government officials who sell justice or injustice in the name of Muley Hassan, and who are sure to find favor in his eyes so long as they keep the cherifian coffers well filled. Tharp's Elegant New Store and His Splendid Old Goods.

These headlines would not be appropriate in any line of merchandise except wines and liquors. It is a well anthenticated fact that the older the wines and higher the wines and higher the wines and higher the wines and liquors are the more liquors and wines by their men at taste and by the at taste and by their men at taste and between at taste and by their men at taste and by acter, with no deleterious effects after con-vivial indulgence if taken in moderation—as any good thing can be abused. Mr. JAMES THARP, at 812 F street northwest, is one of the pioneer liquor and wine merchants in the national capital and has in his cellar some of the oldest and most desirable goods in his line in the city. His "Old Rye Berkeley Whisky" stands pre-eminent in the list of good old whisky.
